DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Red Wing, the Trapper By DADDY

Jack and Janet ride into the woods, where they find animals and birds caught in snares. They set their friends free. They learn that the traps have been set by an Indian. henter. When the hunter tries to find them Jack dashes at him and the Indian is caught in one of his arm traps.

CHAPTER IV Red Wing Is Surprised THE Indian hunter was a most astonished chap. He had been cought in his own snare, and hung upside down from a swaying, jerking Mekory sapling.

"Ugh!" grunted the Indian. "Ugh!" He twisted and turned and tried to draw himself up, but he couldn't get from the snare. Jack jumped off Trixie, the pony, and Jack jumped on Tritle, the pony, and sicked up the bow and arrows which the Indian had dropped.

"Do you give up?" cried Jack, not moving what else to say. "Will you be a good Indian if I free you from that snare?" "Ugh!" grunted the Indian, "I am a good Indian now. Cut me loose."

Not until you promise not to harm the persons who freed the beasts and lids from your snares!"

"Ugh! I'll teach those robbers to let my traps alone," grunted the Indian

"We are the robbers," said Jack.
"And if you feel that way about it, we will leave you in your own trap. Good Jack pretended to ride away.

"Ugh!" grunted the Indian, wildly thrashing about. "Ugh! I'll promise not to harm you!" Jack and Janet turned back. "And will you promise not to trap more poor rabbits and squirrels partridges and bears?" asked "Ugh! I'll trap all the birds and mimals I can as my ancestors did be-fore me," grunted the Indian. "Then again we bid you farewell," mid Jack, once more heading his pony into the woods. He and Janet rode in-to the bushes out of sight. They ex-pected the Indian to call upon them to

But the Indian didn't call-at least not right away. He was too busy with a new trouble that had come to him. That new trouble was Cold Nose Bear. When Cold Nose Bear saw the Indian trapped in the snare he was glad. He wanted to get even for the pain he himself had suffered. He opened his big mouth, showing his gleaming teeth. Uttering a deep growl he rushed at the

"Ugh!" grunted the Indian, thrash-ing out with his fist. The fist caught Cold Nose Bear on the tip of his soft Cold Nose didn't like that a bit and a third blow made the swaying Indian bump among the branches of the trees. Now the Indian got his voice

'Help!" he cried. "Help me, boy Help me, girl! I'll promise not to trap any more birds or beasts." Jack and Janet were waiting for that promise. They rode back to the side of the swinging Indian.

"Go away, Cold Nose," said Jack, and the bear obeyed. Reaching up from the pony's back, Jack sawed his knife

HUMAN GLAND STORY DENIED

McCormick Incensed by Report He Deprived Man of Vital Organ

Chicago, June 20 .- Harold F. Mcormick, head of the Executive Com-ittee of the International Harvester Company, yesterday announced his in-tantion to sue for libel every newspaper which published the report that he pur-chased a gland of another man to be grafted into his own body. It was Mr. McCormick's first state-ment since he nt since he went to the Wesley Menorial Hospital for an operation almost aree weeks ago, and he made it plain was chiefly incensed at the repeated sories that he had taken advantage of man to deprive him of a vital EDUCATIONAL
